The complete history of the game is mentioned on a huge board near the statue. It is Approved by Maharashtra Sports Council & Common Wealth Games Committee. These are some of the snaps of the Statue. This Statue depicts the Grace & fame of the Lagori game.

The Lagori

Lagori is the most complex popular children game in India, and is rather like Dodgeball on steroids. It is a pile of 7 stones heaped on above the other and hence called saat-pathar (seven stones), pittu and several other local names.

This is a team game played between two teams at least of 3 players each. A pile of 7 stones is arranged in the center of the court. Two teams, defending and attacking, stand on either side of the pile of the stones. The defending team attempts to knock down the pile with a tennis ball, from a throwing crease line. The team member knock down the pile but unfortunately someone from opposing team catches the ball, the entire defending team is out of the game and play switches the sides.

The new defending team hits the stack and knocks it down. The same team now tries to stack it back, while the attacking team attempts to hit them with the tennis ball. If the defenders manage to restack all 7, they win. If the attackers manage to hit every one of them with the tennis ball before the restacking is complete, they win. The winner side shouts 'Lagori' to signal the end of game.

Disrupt the stack of 7 as little as possible and hit the running team members with accuracy that is the champion of the game.

The limited requirement of this game makes it trendy in children. Start this game in playground or even in an empty street. The game will go on and on for hours. Simple and interesting game isn't it ?
